Mr. Francis said it was ovident there was no serious attempt on the part of the defence to dispute that the plaintiff was the Prince. He submitted that no carelessness or negligence had been shown against the plaintiff whatever. As to the loss of the note, he had kept it with all the care that any person might have been expected to observe, and the same also with his seal. On the other hand he thought it was evident there had been carelessness on the part of the Bank. that of the previous day, was yet capitally adapted There had not been proper inquiries made, and as to the impressions on the two receipts and the plaintiff's chop, nobody comparing the two could have supposed them to have been made by the same chop. It was a very suspicious orienmthe document produced. As the agent had been so careless as not to see the difference between the two chops, his statement that the chop which had been out out exactly resembled the one he received from Shanghai was not entitled to much weight. The whole evidence for the defence did not amount to a defence in law, and as to the defendant's carelessness there could be no reasonable doubt. His Lordship then summed up to the jury. suggest no reason why they should not do so, as he listened carefully to every question put to him. and appeared to give ready and straightforward answer to them all, and not to keeping anything back, as was so frequently the case with Chinese witnesses. This was a case in which one of two innocent parties had to suffer. If the jury were satisfied that the chops given were not forgari and that the 'rince received the n mey, the the defendants were entitled to judgment. however, they believed what the plantiff!

said, their verdict would be for him. The jury at once returned a verdict for th plaintiff for the amount of the letter of credit stated to be equivalent, to $13,875 with interest and costs.
